

Hello All,

I decided to wait to do the e-mail until today because there were some events this week that made sense to add now rather than wait until the next one. On that note, my next and final e-mail of the school year will come sometime in mid May. Most of March was taken up with class and a few other activities. I was actually off campus almost as much as I was on during the month of March, so there's not a lot of news either. The major bits of news my first job as a manager and our most recent choir concert.

To wrap up on my grades from mid-terms, everything did go as well as I had expected. A few of my classes didn't actually report grades, but the ones that did were no worse than a B+. Right now I'm in the process of putting together about 30 pages worth of papers for the next couple of weeks, and that will pretty much finish out my classes.

As I said, I was home almost as much as I was here in March, because we had spring break and Easter break within three weeks. During spring break I spent some time at Senior. I also got to see Senior's performance of Little Shop of Horrors during that break. A week and a half later I was fortunate enough, during Easter break to go to Senior's "Man Pageant" and Dance Marathon. All in all my breaks were a nice escape from classes here on campus.

Since returning to campus I've had plenty to do to keep me busy. I worked my first shift as a sports manager at a baseball game. It was fun because I wouldn't normally go all the way across campus to see a game. I also was named Reckers Employee of the Week for the last week of March. It's nice to be recognized for my work, even though it doesn't really come with any extra perks. Finally, the reason that I put off writing and sending this e-mail was our final Chorale concert of the year. At the end of April we will be recording a CD with some of the material from the concert. I will forward information regarding purchasing those CDs in the next e-mail.

Other than that, life on campus has been pretty much just that, life. I look forward to finishing up my first year of college and continuing with my education.

In Notre Dame,

Jesse
